

PREFACE

By Influencer Bright (Kabagema Joseph Bright)

There are moments in human history when heaven speaks with unusual intensity — moments when God releases a word that shakes nations, reforms hearts, and calls generations back to divine purpose. One such moment has come through the voice of Prophet Reuben Habbaasa, the Prophet Messenger of the Most High God, carrying the message titled “The Wind of Change.”

When I first heard these prophetic declarations, something stirred deeply within me. It wasn't just a message; it was a movement. It was as if the Spirit of God was breathing afresh upon a generation that had fallen asleep, calling us to rise and align with the divine currents shaping the earth.

This book, The Wind of Change, is a humble attempt to preserve and interpret those heavenly words for the reader. It's not merely a record of prophecies — it is a spiritual roadmap for men and women who sense that the times are shifting, that the old has passed, and that a new season has begun.

As I meditated on these messages, I felt a deep responsibility to write — to help others not only hear the voice of God but also understand what the wind is doing. For indeed, the Spirit moves as the wind moves: unseen, yet undeniable; gentle, yet powerful; silent, yet world-changing.

This book is written to every believer who feels a stirring, a restlessness, a hunger for more. It is written for those who sense that something in the spirit realm is turning — that God is preparing His people for transformation.

You will find in these pages both the prophetic voice of God through His servant and the reflective insights that interpret, teach, and apply these revelations to personal life, leadership, family, and nationhood.

My prayer is that as you read, you will not only understand The Wind of Change but also become part of it — that your heart, your home, your ministry, and your nation will be carried forward by the same Spirit that spoke through the prophet.

For the wind is already blowing.

The question is — will you move with it?

Apostle Reuben Habaasa prophet messenger of the most high GOD in tis generation

INTRODUCTION

“The Wind Blows Where It Wishes...” — John 3:8

From the beginning of creation, God has always moved through the wind. In Genesis, the Spirit of God hovered like a wind over the waters before light appeared. In Ezekiel’s valley, it was the breath from the four winds that brought dead bones back to life. And on the day of Pentecost, it was a mighty rushing wind that filled the upper room and gave birth to the church.

The Wind of Change is not a poetic phrase — it is a divine reality. Whenever God is about to shift history, He releases a wind. That wind carries revelation, revival, and reformation. It moves people, it breaks systems, and it ushers in a new order aligned with heaven’s design.

Through Prophet Reuben Habbaasa, the Spirit of God has declared that a new wind is blowing. It is not a mere weather of emotion or prophecy of convenience — it is a spiritual current sent to awaken the church, purify nations, and realign destinies.

This wind comes with both comfort and confrontation. It comforts those who have waited in obedience, but it confronts those who have grown comfortable in disobedience. It dismantles what is false, exposes what is hidden, and empowers what is true.

In this book, we will walk through the different dimensions of that divine wind — how it moves, who it touches, and what it demands of us. You will read the messages of the prophet and the interpretive reflections that help you recognize the hand of God in your own life and generation.

You will discover that The Wind of Change is not only a prophecy for the world — it is a personal invitation. It calls you to surrender to God’s movement, to release control, and to allow the Spirit to carry you into new levels of faith, leadership, and purpose.

As you read, do not rush. Let the words settle into your spirit. Pray. Listen. Reflect.

For these pages carry more than sentences — they carry the breath of God.

The world is changing. Systems are shaking. The heavens are speaking.

And God is raising voices like Reuben Habbaasa to announce that the Wind of Change has begun.

CHAPTER ONE: THE SOUND OF CHANGE

Every generation has a sound that defines its season. When God begins to move, He releases a sound in the spirit before anything becomes visible in the natural. That sound may not be understood by all, yet those who are spiritually awake will sense it within their hearts before they see it with their eyes. The sound of change is not an event; it is an awakening. It is the whisper of heaven announcing that the time has come for transformation to begin.

When Prophet Reuben Habbaasa spoke about the Wind of Change, he was not describing a physical wind that we feel on our faces. He was describing a spiritual atmosphere being shifted by the hand of God. There are moments when heaven sends a divine vibration into the earth that shakes systems, governments, churches, and families. It is not meant to destroy but to realign. The sound of change is the first sign that heaven has decided to intervene in human affairs.

Throughout scripture, we see God using sound as a symbol of His movement. When David heard the sound of marching in the tops of the mulberry trees, it was a signal that the Lord had gone before him into battle. When Elijah stood on the mountain, there was a great wind, an earthquake, and a fire, but God was not in them until a still small voice came forth. That voice was the true sound of change. It was not the noise of the storm but the calm direction of the Spirit that revealed God's will.

The sound of change is not always loud. Sometimes it comes as a stirring in your spirit, a holy dissatisfaction with the way things have been. You begin to feel that the comfort zone is no longer enough. You start to sense that God is calling you into something deeper, something higher. That inner restlessness is often the sound of the Spirit blowing within you, preparing you for a new assignment.

This divine sound calls men and women to rise. It challenges leaders to reform, churches to revive, and families to return to their foundations. The sound of change brings conviction, awakening hearts that have grown dull. It removes the veil of complacency and ignites the hunger for righteousness. Those who hear it are never the same again because the sound carries the breath of divine purpose.

When the sound of change comes, it demands attention. Some will resist it because it disturbs their comfort, while others will embrace it because they understand that growth is hidden within disruption. Every revival in history began with a sound that few understood but many felt. It was a spiritual announcement that the old order was ending and the new one was beginning.

To discern the sound of change, you must quiet the noise of the world. The Spirit does not shout above confusion; He speaks within stillness. Prayer, fasting, and meditation create the space where divine sound becomes clear. When your heart is tuned to the frequency of heaven, you will hear the sound of destiny calling you forward.

The sound of change is not limited to churches or prophets. It reaches into nations, schools, families, and even economies. It is the same wind that blows across the valleys of dry bones to bring life. It is the sound that unites generations under one divine purpose. God uses it to awaken nations like Rwanda, to remind them of their redemptive destiny and the role they must play in the healing of the world.

This chapter reminds us that when you begin to hear the sound of change, do not fear. The same God who sends the wind also controls its direction. You are not being shaken to fall but to rise. Every shaking carries a purpose. The sound of change may disrupt what is familiar, but it also introduces what is divine.

The Wind of Change has begun to blow. Can you hear its sound in your spirit? It calls you to surrender, to trust, and to move. The sound is not in the distance; it is within you. Those who listen will be carried forward into the new season that God has already prepared. Those who ignore it will remain where the wind no longer blows. Therefore, open your heart, sharpen your spirit, and listen carefully, for the sound of change is the announcement of your new beginning.

CHAPTER TWO: THE PROPHET AND THE MESSAGE

Every divine movement begins with a voice. Before God acts, He raises a messenger to announce His purpose and prepare the hearts of those who must receive it. The Wind of Change, as revealed through Prophet Reuben Habbaasa, is not just a message; it is a divine call delivered through a chosen vessel. To understand the message, we must first recognize the messenger and the God who sent him.

A prophet is more than a preacher or a dreamer. A prophet is a mouthpiece of God, a carrier of divine secrets. When the Lord wants to shift a generation, He speaks through a prophet to give direction and to interpret the times. In every age, God has never left His people without a prophetic voice. Noah warned his generation before the flood. Moses spoke to Pharaoh before Israel's deliverance. Elijah confronted idolatry before rain returned to the land. Likewise, in our time, God has raised Prophet Reuben Habbaasa to sound the trumpet of awakening and to declare that the Wind of Change has come.

The prophet's message does not originate from personal thought or human wisdom. It is born in the secret place where man meets God. A true prophet speaks what he has heard, not what he has imagined. He becomes a vessel through which heaven reveals its agenda. When Prophet Habbaasa speaks of the Wind of Change, he does so not as a commentator on events but as one who has stood before God and heard the command to announce a new season.

The calling of a prophet is never easy. It comes with rejection, misunderstanding, and spiritual warfare. Yet the prophet must obey because silence in the face of a divine command is disobedience. The prophet carries the burden of heaven, often feeling the weight of what is to come before others see it. His heart beats in rhythm with God's heartbeat, and his voice becomes the echo of eternity speaking into time.

Through the life and ministry of Prophet Reuben Habbaasa, we see a clear pattern of divine communication. His messages are not simply warnings or predictions; they are invitations. They call the church to repentance, families to restoration, and nations to righteousness. The Wind of Change is both a declaration and a direction. It declares that God is moving, and it directs His people on how to align with that movement.

Every prophetic message carries both revelation and responsibility. Revelation opens our eyes to what God is saying, and responsibility calls us to act on it. The message of the Wind of Change is not for hearing only; it is for transformation. When the prophet speaks, we are not called to admire his voice but to respond to God's voice through him. Those who receive the message with faith will experience the move of God personally, while those who ignore it risk missing the divine shift.

In this generation, the role of the prophet is often misunderstood. Some expect entertainment, others seek predictions about their future. But the true prophet does not come to satisfy curiosity. He comes to reveal God's heart, correct our path, and call us back to alignment. The Wind of Change message reminds us that the prophetic is not for excitement; it is for direction. When God speaks, it is because He loves us enough to guide us before the storm.

Prophets are also mirrors reflecting the condition of society. Through them, God shows us where we have fallen and where we must rise again. When Prophet Habbaasa declares that the wind is blowing, he is telling us that heaven has noticed our stagnation and decided to stir us again. The Spirit is moving to awaken the sleeping church, to rebuild broken families, and to restore lost hope. The prophet becomes the carrier of this heavenly wind, releasing it through spoken word into the hearts of men.

To honor the message, we must honor the vessel without worshiping him. Prophets are human but divinely appointed. They are not to be idolized but respected as servants of God. Their value lies in their obedience. When a prophet speaks truth with humility and purity, the message carries life. That is what we witness in the ministry of Prophet Reuben Habbaasa — a voice that points to God, not to itself.

The message of the Wind of Change is therefore a partnership between heaven, the messenger, and the listener. Heaven reveals, the messenger delivers, and the listener responds. When all three align, transformation happens. God has chosen to speak again, and through His servant, He is calling a generation to rise, to reform, and to walk in the new direction of His Spirit.

This chapter reminds us that every true prophet is a bridge between the divine and the earthly. When you encounter such a voice, do not harden your heart. Listen, discern, and obey. For behind the messenger stands the One who sends the message, and behind the message is the power to bring change. The Wind of Change is not just a prophecy; it is God's breath moving through a man to awaken a world that has forgotten the sound of His voice.

CHAPTER THREE: THE SEASON OF TRANSITION

Chapter Introduction

Every move of God comes with a season, and every season carries its own assignment. A transition season is the bridge between what was and what is to come. It is the time when God rearranges circumstances, people, and places to prepare for His next agenda. The Wind of Change is not only about the sound or the messenger—it is about the season in which heaven declares, “Now is the time.”

Many people can sense that something has shifted, yet few understand how to navigate it. Transition seasons can feel uncomfortable, uncertain, and sometimes painful. They test our patience, obedience, and faith. But in truth, these are not seasons of loss—they are seasons of divine reordering. God uses transition to move us from one level of grace to another, from comfort to calling, and from routine to revelation.

In this chapter, we will explore the meaning of divine transition, how to recognize its signs, and how to position ourselves correctly when the wind of change begins to blow. When you understand the nature of transition, you stop fighting it and start flowing with it. Every delay has a purpose. Every shift has a message. And every ending is an introduction to a new beginning.

I. Understanding Divine Transition

Every transition is designed by God to reposition His people for greater purpose. Transition is not punishment—it is promotion wrapped in discomfort. In divine timing, God closes old chapters not because they failed, but because they have fulfilled their assignment. To stay in a completed season is to delay destiny.

II. Recognizing the Signs of Change

God never moves without sending signs. These signs may come through spiritual restlessness, shifting relationships, unusual opportunities, or closed doors. What seems like loss is often God's way of saying, "It's time to move." Recognizing these signals allows you to cooperate with heaven instead of resisting the flow of the Spirit.

III. The Pain and Purpose of Transition

Every change demands a letting go. The pain of transition comes when we try to hold on to what God has already released. Yet pain is often the midwife of purpose. Just as childbirth is preceded by labor, spiritual promotion is preceded by pressure. Learn to see pain as a passage, not a prison.

IV. When God Changes Your Circle

In seasons of transition, God often changes the people around you. Some will leave, not because they hate you, but because their part in your journey is complete. God disconnects you from certain voices to make room for new ones that will speak into your next assignment. Do not mourn over those who depart—honor their season and move forward in peace.

V. The Role of Obedience in Transition

Obedience is the anchor that keeps you stable when everything else is shifting. In uncertain times, clarity comes through submission. When you cannot understand God's plan, trust His voice. Many lose their way in transition because they listen to emotions instead of instruction. Obedience unlocks direction.

VI. The Battle Between the Old and the New

Every transition involves warfare. The old season tries to pull you back while the new one calls you forward. The enemy's goal is to keep you stuck between what was and what should be. You must decide where your loyalty lies—with your past or with your purpose. The wind of change cannot carry those who cling to the old.

VII. The Waiting Room of God

Before every promotion, there is a waiting period. The waiting room is not punishment but preparation. God hides you to shape you. He delays to develop you. In the waiting, He teaches you patience, humility, and faith. Those who wait well rise strong.

VIII. Divine Alignment and Timing

When you are in transition, timing becomes crucial. Moving too early can lead to frustration; moving too late can cause missed opportunities. The key is to stay sensitive to the Spirit. God's timing is perfect even when it feels inconvenient. The wind of change has a schedule—learn to move when it blows.

IX. The Transformation of Mindset

No new season can be lived with an old mindset. Transition requires mental renewal. God changes your environment only after He has changed your thinking. Old beliefs cannot sustain new blessings. The wind of change begins in the mind before it manifests in reality.

X. Stepping Into the New Season

When the time comes to step into your new season, step boldly. Do not look back with regret or forward with fear. The same God who led you through transition will sustain you in transformation. Celebrate the new beginning and embrace it with faith, knowing that the wind of change has positioned you for greater glory.

Closing Reflection

Every divine transition is proof that heaven has not forgotten you. What feels like shaking is often God's way of shifting. If you are in a season of transition, do not panic—prepare. The wind of change is not against you; it is carrying you toward your next assignment. What God begins, He always completes. Stand still, stay sensitive, and let the wind move you into your destiny.

CHAPTER FOUR: THE WIND THAT BREAKS

Before new life begins, something old must be broken. Before light shines, darkness must be confronted. In the journey of transformation, the Wind of Change first comes as a breaking wind. It does not arrive to comfort, but to correct. It does not come to destroy, but to dismantle everything that hinders growth and purity. The breaking wind is the most misunderstood part of God's movement, because it often feels like loss, yet it is divine surgery—removing what no longer belongs to your destiny.

When the wind that breaks begins to blow, many are tempted to resist it. We cry out to God for blessing and elevation, yet forget that brokenness is the pathway to true blessing. God never builds on a proud heart; He builds on a yielded one. The breaking wind bends us until our will aligns with His. It humbles us, purifies our motives, and exposes the foundations upon which we have built our lives. Just as a farmer plows the ground before planting new seeds, the Spirit plows through our pride, selfishness, and comfort before planting new purpose within us.

Throughout Scripture, God has always broken before building. When Jacob wrestled with God, his hip was dislocated, and he limped into destiny. When Israel left Egypt, their old life was shattered before they entered the Promised Land. When Jesus broke the bread, it multiplied. Breaking always precedes blessing. The Wind of Change comes first to confront and crush everything that limits the flow of divine purpose. What God breaks, He intends to remake better.

Many believers struggle to understand why God allows storms and losses. Yet the wind that breaks is not punishment; it is purification. God allows shaking so that only what cannot be shaken may remain. If your faith, relationship, or calling survives the breaking wind, it is because it was real. What falls apart under pressure was never meant to carry you into the next season. The breaking wind is a test of foundations—it reveals what is built on sand and what is built on rock.

When the breaking wind comes, do not panic. Instead, discern its purpose. The pain you feel is not evidence of God's absence but proof of His involvement. He is near to the brokenhearted, and He saves those who are crushed in spirit. Brokenness brings clarity. It strips away illusions and false securities. It teaches dependence on God rather than on position, money, or approval. When all else fails, you learn that His grace alone is sufficient.

The breaking wind also separates. It removes people, habits, and environments that cannot go with you into the next dimension of destiny. Some relationships will fade, some doors will close, and some platforms will fall apart. Do not chase what God is removing. The wind that breaks does not make mistakes. It clears your path so that new growth can emerge. Holding on to what God is trying to release will only delay your progress.

There is also beauty hidden in the breaking. A seed must break open before it grows into a tree. Oil only flows after the olive is crushed. Perfume is released only when the alabaster jar is shattered. Likewise, your anointing increases when you surrender to divine breaking. The very pain you wish to escape is often the process that releases your fragrance to the world. God never wastes a broken vessel; He transforms it into a channel of grace.

Sometimes the breaking wind will touch areas we thought were secure. It may affect our careers, health, or comfort. But God uses it to draw our attention back to Him. When everything else is shaking, the unshakable presence of God becomes our anchor. The Wind of Change breaks to reveal what truly matters. It dismantles the idols we built and restores the throne of God in our hearts.

The secret to surviving the breaking wind is surrender. Stop fighting what God is doing. Stop trying to fix what He is finished with. Trust the process even when it hurts. The broken stage of life is not the end; it is preparation for expansion. The vessel must be emptied before it is filled. The soil must be turned before it is fruitful. The spirit must be humbled before it is lifted.

In seasons of breaking, prayer becomes deeper, worship becomes purer, and faith becomes stronger. You stop performing and start depending. You stop pretending and start transforming. The breaking wind doesn't leave you in pieces—it leaves you in purpose. Those who endure it come out refined, wiser, and ready for greater responsibility.

So when you feel the breaking wind around you, remember that it is not meant to destroy you but to deliver you. God is removing what blocks your blessing. He is pruning so that you may bear much fruit. Every broken area of your life can become a doorway of glory if you allow God to finish His work. The Wind of Change breaks only to rebuild. And when it has finished its work, you will stand stronger, purer, and more aligned with the divine will.

The wind that breaks is not the end of your story—it is the beginning of your transformation. Let it blow. Let it shape you. Let it carry away what cannot remain. For after the breaking comes the building, and after the shaking comes the shining. The Wind of Change has begun, and those who yield to it will rise with renewed strength and divine purpose.

CHAPTER FIVE: THE RISE OF PROPHETIC VOICES IN THE WIND OF CHANGE

Chapter Introduction

Throughout history, every divine season of change has been heralded by prophetic voices. These messengers stand between heaven and earth, interpreting the mysteries of God's movements to humanity. In the season of the Wind of Change, God has not been silent; He has raised men and women like Reuben Habbaasa to awaken nations, call for repentance, and guide leaders into divine alignment. This chapter explores the rise of prophetic voices in this generation — their calling, purpose, and the spiritual authority that empowers them to speak truth in the face of darkness.

I. The Call of the Prophet in Times of Transition

Every time God transitions the world from one dispensation to another, He calls a prophet to prepare the way. The call is never born out of human desire but divine compulsion. The prophets are chosen vessels through whom God expresses His heart and intentions. Reuben Habbaasa's calling reflects this divine pattern — a messenger raised not by popularity but by heavenly commissioning. Like Elijah stood before Ahab, or like John prepared the way for Christ, modern prophetic voices are raised to prepare nations for what God is about to do.

II. The Weight and Responsibility of a Prophetic Mantle

The prophetic mantle is not a badge of honor but a burden of obedience. Prophets are not entertainers of the crowd; they are guardians of truth. When the Wind of Change began to blow, the voice of the prophet carried both warning and hope. Many could not understand his message because spiritual things are discerned spiritually. To carry a word from God means to carry a cross of misunderstanding, rejection, and loneliness — yet it is through such pain that prophetic authority is purified.

III. Discerning the Voice of the True Prophet

In every generation, there are many voices — some from God, others from the flesh, and some from deception. Discerning the true prophetic voice requires spiritual sensitivity and scriptural grounding. The true prophet's message aligns with the Word of God, carries the fragrance of humility, and produces repentance and transformation. Reuben Habbaasa's messages on the Wind of Change reveal consistency with God's timeless principles — calling the people to purity, renewal, and faith in the Living God.

IV. Prophets as Agents of National Transformation

Prophets are not only voices in the church but also watchmen over nations. They speak into governance, economy, morality, and the destiny of people. The Wind of Change does not blow within church walls only — it reaches parliaments, markets, schools, and homes. When a nation listens to the voice of God through His prophets, transformation becomes inevitable. From Joseph in Egypt to Daniel in Babylon, prophets have always influenced national destiny. In the same way, modern prophetic messengers are awakening nations to God's agenda.

V. The Cost of Carrying the Prophetic Word

Every true prophet pays a price. They are misunderstood, accused, and sometimes rejected by the very people they are sent to help. The path of the prophet is marked by loneliness, fasting, and tears. Yet, through this suffering, they become refined instruments of God's voice. Reuben Habbaasa's commitment to the message of change despite criticism exemplifies the courage every prophetic messenger must carry — the courage to speak truth even when it shakes systems of comfort and corruption.

VI. The Role of the Church in Supporting Prophetic Voices

The church must not silence the prophetic but discern and support it. When prophetic voices arise, they need intercession, accountability, and partnership. The Wind of Change is not an individual movement; it is a divine wave that requires collective obedience. The Body of Christ must learn to embrace prophetic direction without fear or resistance. When the church honors the prophets, it positions itself for divine visitation.

VII. The Global Prophetic Awakening

The rise of prophetic voices is not limited to one nation; it is a global move. Across continents, God is raising prophetic messengers who echo the same cry — prepare for change. This synchronized sound is evidence that heaven is orchestrating a worldwide awakening. The Wind of Change is blowing from Africa to the nations, carrying with it the message of restoration, righteousness, and revival.

VIII. The Voice in the Wilderness: Lessons from Reuben Habbaasa

Every prophetic messenger carries a unique tone in God's orchestra. Reuben Habbaasa's voice carries the sound of revival and urgency. His teachings on repentance, purity, and national renewal mirror the ancient cries of prophets like Jeremiah and Amos. His life reminds the world that God still speaks, and His messages are not outdated. The Wind of Change is God's answer to a generation that has lost its moral compass — and through his voice, that compass is being restored.

IX. From Prophecy to Fulfillment: The Journey of Faith

Prophecy is not fulfilled by hearing alone but by obedience. The people who hear the word must act upon it. Many prophecies die not because they are false but because the listeners remain passive. The Wind of Change calls every believer to become a participant in God's unfolding plan. It is not enough to admire the prophet; one must align with the prophetic instruction to see the promise come to pass.

X. The Enduring Legacy of Prophetic Voices

When prophets depart, their words live on. The messages they deliver continue to shape generations. The legacy of a prophet is not in their fame but in the fruit their obedience produces. The voice of Reuben Habbaasa will be remembered as one that stood firm in an age of compromise — a voice that cried out for change and stirred hearts toward God. The Wind of Change will continue to blow, carried by the echo of prophetic words that cannot die.

CHAPTER SIX: THE NATIONS UNDER THE WIND OF CHANGE

Chapter Introduction

When God releases a divine wind, it does not blow over one house or one nation alone; it sweeps across borders, cultures, and systems. The Wind of Change is not a local event but a global movement orchestrated by the hand of the Most High. Nations rise and fall under the influence of divine timing, and in every generation, God shifts the balance of power to align the earth with His heavenly agenda. This chapter explores how nations are affected, transformed, and redirected under this prophetic wind. It reveals that God is repositioning the nations — preparing them for His glory, justice, and the fulfillment of prophecy.

I. God's Sovereignty Over the Nations

Every kingdom, government, and ruler exists under the authority of God. He lifts up one and brings down another according to His divine plan. The Wind of Change reminds the nations that sovereignty belongs to God alone. When men believe that power rests in their hands,

God demonstrates that the breath of His word can shake empires and rewrite destinies. The rise and fall of nations are not coincidences but divine operations in the unseen realm.

II. The Shaking of World Systems

Before renewal comes, shaking must occur. The Wind of Change is shaking political, economic, and religious systems built on pride and injustice. Nations that have built their confidence on wealth, corruption, or oppression are experiencing divine disruption. Yet, this shaking is not destruction — it is purification. Through it, God is removing the old order to establish righteousness and equity among people.

III. The Role of Africa in the Prophetic Season

Africa, once considered the “dark continent,” is rising as a spiritual light to the world. The Wind of Change is blowing strongly across its nations, awakening prophetic voices, reviving spiritual altars, and restoring dignity. God is raising leaders from Africa who carry humility, wisdom, and divine vision. The voice of Reuben Habbaasa and others like him marks the emergence of a new African prophetic movement — one that speaks life, leadership, and holiness to the global church.

IV. The Spiritual Battle Behind National Transitions

Behind every visible political or social change lies an invisible war in the spiritual realm. Principalities fight to maintain control over nations, while angelic hosts advance God’s agenda for freedom and justice. The Wind of Change exposes this conflict — showing that every prophetic movement encounters resistance. The intercessors must stand in prayer for their nations, for victory in the spirit precedes victory in the natural.

V. The Call for National Repentance

No nation can experience transformation without repentance. The Wind of Change calls leaders and citizens alike to turn from wickedness, corruption, and moral decay. National healing begins when hearts are humbled before God. Like Nineveh in the days of Jonah, nations that respond to the prophetic warning will be spared from judgment. God is not against nations; He is against sin and injustice that destroy them from within.

VI. Prophetic Patterns in Global History.

Throughout history, every major shift has been preceded by divine messages delivered through chosen vessels. From Moses confronting Pharaoh to Isaiah declaring restoration for Israel, the prophetic always precedes the historic. The Wind of Change follows this same pattern — a divine announcement before a transformation. Understanding these patterns helps nations discern the time and avoid repeating the errors of history.

VII. The Rise of Righteous Governance

God is raising leaders with clean hands and pure hearts. Under the Wind of Change, corrupt systems are being exposed, and new leaders are being anointed — not by men's choice but by God's appointment. These leaders will govern with compassion, justice, and a fear of the Lord. They will prioritize the welfare of the people over personal gain. This new breed of leadership will redefine governance as service, not control.

VIII. The Nations as Carriers of Revival

The Wind of Change is not only removing the old; it is also planting seeds of revival. Nations that once sent missionaries are now receiving revival fire from unexpected places. God is redistributing spiritual influence so that every continent participates in the harvest. The nations will no longer compete but complement one another in fulfilling the Great Commission.

IX. The Destiny of Israel and the Global Church

Israel remains the prophetic clock of the world. The Wind of Change aligns nations with God's covenant with Israel — blessing those who honor it and shaking those who stand against it. Meanwhile, the global church must rise in unity and purity, walking in the spirit of reconciliation. The prophetic movement across nations is a sign that God is preparing His people for the return of Christ, the ultimate fulfillment of all prophecy.

X. The Hope and Future of the Nations

Though the shaking may appear fearful, there is hope. God's purpose in the Wind of Change is restoration, not ruin. Nations that yield to His direction will rise stronger, more righteous, and more united. The future belongs to those who discern the times and align with heaven's voice. The wind will not destroy what is built on truth; it will only strengthen it. As Habbaasa and other prophetic voices continue to speak, the nations are reminded that God's plans are good, His timing perfect, and His mercy enduring forever.

CHAPTER SEVEN: THE CHURCH IN THE MIDST OF THE WIND OF CHANGE

Chapter Introduction

The church stands at the center of God's divine dealings with humanity. In every season of transition, the Spirit of God calls the church to awaken, to align, and to act as a vessel of His will upon the earth. The Wind of Change is not only a national or personal call — it is first a spiritual call to the Body of Christ. This wind is purifying the church, separating the sincere from the superficial, and restoring the voice of truth to the altar.

Prophet Messenger of the Most High God, Reuben Habbaasa, has declared that this move of God is a sacred reminder that the Lord who spoke to Moses still speaks today. Just as God instructed Moses concerning the Sabbath — a time set apart for divine rest and encounter — the Lord has spoken again in this generation, commissioning gatherings on Thursdays and at the end of every month as holy assemblies to experience The Wind of Change. This prophetic instruction confirms that the voice of God is not silent. The same God who spoke to Moses in Hebrew speaks today in English — for He speaks to every generation in the language they understand.

I. The Church as the Custodian of Divine Seasons

The church is not merely a building or institution; it is the living body through which God manifests His purposes. In times of divine visitation, God uses His church as a channel to release His power and wisdom to the nations. The Wind of Change is God's reminder that the church must remain spiritually alert, guarding the purity of its message and the integrity of its altar.

II. Hearing God in the Language of the Generation

When God spoke to Moses, He used a voice and a language that Moses could comprehend. In our time, He continues to reveal His will through the tongues and technologies of our generation. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa emphasizes that the God who spoke to Moses still speaks today — and now, He speaks in English to reach this generation. This truth breaks the barrier of disbelief and reminds believers that divine communication is not limited by time, culture, or language.

III. The Thursday and End-of-Month Gathering

Under divine instruction, Prophet Habbaasa declared Thursdays and the end of each month as sacred moments to gather, pray, and experience The Wind of Change. These gatherings are not mere meetings but prophetic convocations — times of spiritual refreshing, revelation, and renewal. God chose Thursday as a day of divine visitation, marking it as a prophetic rhythm in which heaven meets earth. Each end-of-month gathering symbolizes transition — leaving the old behind and entering a new dimension of grace.

IV. The Presence of God Among His People

When God's people gather in obedience, His presence manifests in extraordinary ways. During the Wind of Change gatherings, testimonies of healing, restoration, and spiritual awakening have been witnessed. This fulfills the promise Jesus made: "Where two or three gather in My name, there am I in the midst of them." The living presence of God is what transforms ordinary meetings into divine encounters.

V. Returning to the Ancient Paths of Holiness

The Wind of Change is not a trend but a call to holiness. The church must return to the fear of the Lord, integrity in leadership, and purity of worship. God is cleansing His altar from deception and materialism. Prophet Habbaasa's message reminds believers that revival cannot come without repentance, and power cannot flow where sin is tolerated.

VI. The Prophetic Voice Within the Church.

In every age, God places prophetic voices within His church to guide, correct, and direct His people. Many churches today resist the prophetic, forgetting that it is one of the gifts Christ gave to the body. The message of the Wind of Change restores the prophetic voice to its rightful place — not for entertainment, but for edification. Reuben Habbaasa's obedience to speak God's message boldly calls the church back to spiritual sensitivity and divine alignment.

VII. The Unity of the Spirit in the Church.

One of the major fruits of this wind is the restoration of unity among believers. Divisions, denominational pride, and personal agendas have grieved the Spirit of God for too long. The Wind of Change comes to unify the church under one kingdom purpose — to glorify God and advance His mission on earth. When believers gather under this wind, love replaces competition, and brotherhood replaces suspicion.

VIII. The Manifestation of Power and Miracles

Where the Spirit moves, signs follow. The Wind of Change gatherings have become platforms of divine manifestation — where the sick are healed, the broken are restored, and the oppressed are delivered. God is proving again that He is the same yesterday, today, and forever. This wave of miracles is not for showmanship but as evidence that God still speaks, and He still acts through His servants.

IX. The Church as a Beacon to the Nations

As the Wind of Change continues to blow, the church must take its rightful place as the moral and spiritual compass of society. The nations look to the church for direction in times of confusion and despair. Prophet Habbaasa's message urges the church to arise and become a city set on a hill — shining with righteousness, compassion, and the power of the Holy Spirit.

X. The End-Time Revival and the Voice That Still Speaks

This move of God is a prelude to the end-time revival promised in Scripture. The Wind of Change is awakening the sleeping church and preparing it for the great harvest of souls. God's voice continues to thunder across generations — not through smoke and fire as on Mount Sinai, but through the clear message of His servants. As Prophet Habbaasa declares, "The God that spoke to Moses still speaks today — and the God that spoke in Hebrew now speaks English to reach His people where they are." The church must listen, respond, and move with the wind — for this is not the hour to debate, but to obey.

CHAPTER 8: THE PROPHETIC SIGNS OF THE WIND OF CHANGE

Chapter Introduction

Every movement of God is marked by signs. Before the flood came, Noah saw signs. Before Israel left Egypt, signs and wonders appeared. Before Jesus was born, a star announced His arrival. And today, before the full manifestation of The Wind of Change, God is revealing prophetic signs through His servants — including Prophet Messenger of the Most High God, Reuben Habbaasa. The signs confirm that this wind is not a human idea but a divine visitation. Habbaasa repeatedly declares that God still speaks, and the same God who instructed Moses continues to guide this generation with clarity and purpose. The message of gathering on Thursdays and at every month's end is itself a prophetic sign — a divine rhythm calling the church and the nations into alignment with God's timing. This chapter unveils the signs that show the Wind of Change is already blowing and intensifying.

I. The Sign of Unusual Divine Instructions

God often reveals new seasons through specific instructions. Just as Moses was told to set apart the Sabbath, Prophet Habbaasa was instructed that God desires His people to gather every Thursday and at month's end to receive the Wind of Change. These sacred convocations are signs of God calling His people back to consistent divine encounter. The precision of this instruction shows that God is reordering the spiritual calendar of His people.

II. The Sign of Prophetic Confirmation

When God announces a new season, He confirms it through multiple voices. The message carried by Prophet Habbaasa — that God is bringing a global shift — aligns with what other prophetic vessels across the world have sensed. This unity of prophetic testimony is a sign that heaven is releasing one sound, one message, and one direction. When prophets agree, it is evidence that the Spirit of God is speaking with clarity.

III. The Sign of Rising Spiritual Hunger

Across nations, believers are experiencing a deep hunger for prayer, holiness, and revelation. This hunger is not natural; it is birthed by the Holy Spirit. People find themselves compelled to seek God more earnestly, attend fellowships more frequently, and fast with new strength. This wave of spiritual desire is a sign that the Wind of Change is preparing hearts for transformation. Hunger always precedes visitation.

IV. The Sign of Disruption in Old Systems.

Before God does something new, He unsettles what is old. Within governments, churches, families, and institutions, hidden issues are surfacing. Corrupt systems are being exposed. Unjust leaders are losing influence. Structures built on pride and disobedience are collapsing. This disruption is not chaos — it is a sign that God is clearing the ground for new foundations. The wind blows hardest where something new is about to emerge.

V. The Sign of Increased Angelic Activity

Many believers are reporting dreams, visions, and encounters with angelic presence. These supernatural experiences bear the same mark as those in Scripture when God was shifting dispensations. Angelic visitations signify that heaven is moving at a heightened pace. Prophet Habbaasa also speaks of angelic assistance accompanying the Thursday gatherings — confirming that the spiritual realm is active during this season.

VI. The Sign of Renewed Prophetic Voices

One of the strongest indicators of a new season is the rise of fresh prophetic voices. In this generation, God is amplifying the voice of Prophet Reuben Habbaasa and others like him to announce, prepare, and direct God's people. The clarity, boldness, and accuracy of these messages are signs that the Spirit is witnessing to the world that a divine wind is blowing. God always raises a messenger before releasing a movement.

VII. The Sign of Global Shaking

Earthquakes, wars, economic instability, and sudden political transitions are not random. They are prophetic signs that the world is being repositioned. Scripture records that whenever God shakes nations, it is a sign that His purpose is being ushered in. The Wind of Change is shifting global power structures and preparing nations for a new prophetic order.

VIII. The Sign of Restored Spiritual Sensitivity

The people of God are beginning to discern more clearly. Dreams that were once ignored now carry weight. Scripture is opening with deeper understanding. And many testify that God is speaking to them more frequently — confirming the declaration of Prophet Habbaasa: “The God who spoke to Moses still speaks today — and He speaks in English because He speaks the language of the generation He is addressing.” This spiritual sensitivity is a sign that God is awakening His people for what is coming.

IX. The Sign of Unexplainable Personal Transformation

Many who participate in the Thursday and end-of-month gatherings experience sudden changes:

addictions breaking, emotional burdens lifting, relationships being restored, and destinies being redirected. These transformations are not by human effort but by the move of the Spirit. The suddenness of these changes is a clear sign that the Wind of Change is not theoretical — it is active, living, and powerful.

X. The Sign of the Gathering Movement

Across regions, people are gathering in unusual numbers, hungry for the presence of God. These gatherings — especially on Thursdays — are not driven by promotion or events; they are driven by a divine pull. Habbaasa teaches that when God calls a gathering, it is because He intends to release a new dimension of His wind. The unity, passion, and expectation in these gatherings are strong signs that God is preparing His people for a mighty visitation.

CHAPTER NINE: THE MESSENGER AND THE MESSAGE — UNDERSTANDING THE ROLE OF GOD’S SERVANTS IN THE WIND OF CHANGE

Chapter Introduction

In every generation, God raises a messenger through whom He releases His prophetic agenda. The message cannot be separated from the messenger, for the vessel is part of the divine communication. When God wanted to deliver Israel from Egypt, He raised Moses. When He wanted to prepare the way for Christ, He raised John the Baptist. When He wanted to birth revival in different nations, He raised men and women who carried His voice. In this generation, Prophet Messenger of the Most High God, Reuben Habbaasa, has been entrusted with the revelation of The Wind of Change. His messages, instructions, and prophetic encounters stand as evidence that God is still speaking, still guiding, and still raising voices to direct His people. This chapter explores the role of God's servants in seasons of transition and how their obedience opens the way for divine manifestation.

I. The Messenger as God's Chosen Instrument

God never works on earth without a man or woman who carries His voice. Messengers are chosen, trained, and prepared in the secret place. Their lives become spiritual tools in the hand of God. Prophet Habbaasa's calling is a testimony of divine choice — the Most High God entrusted him with a message not born of human intelligence but revealed by the Spirit. His obedience to speak the Wind of Change confirms that the priorities of heaven are being revealed through earthly vessels.

II. The Message as a Divine Assignment

The Wind of Change is not a philosophy or opinion; it is a divine assignment. God releases messages that carry power to shape nations and transform people. When Habbaasa declares what God has spoken, he is not offering suggestions but revealing the burden of the Lord. Every word carries weight, direction, and purpose. The message becomes a lamp to those who believe and a warning to those who ignore it.

III. God Still Speaks Through His Messengers

A critical truth carried in Habbaasa's message is that God has not stopped speaking. The same God who spoke to Moses face to face continues to speak today in a language His people understand. As the prophet repeatedly says: "The God who spoke to Moses still speaks. And the God who spoke in Hebrew now speaks in English to this generation." This statement is not a metaphor; it is a revelation. Divine communication adapts to the era, culture, and language of the people God intends to reach.

IV. The Messenger as a Bridge Between Heaven and Earth

Prophetic messengers function as spiritual bridges. They hear what heaven is saying and deliver it to earth with accuracy. They stand between two realms — receiving mysteries and translating them into instructions. Habbaasa's prophetic role in calling for Thursday gatherings and end-of-month assemblies shows the role of a messenger in establishing divine rhythms among God's people. Through such obedience, heaven's agenda is synchronized with earthly time.

V. The Burden and Responsibility of the Messenger

Every true messenger carries a burden — a weight that keeps them aligned with God’s heart. This burden is not chosen; it is received. Habbaasa’s continuous emphasis on holiness, gathering, and listening to God reveals the seriousness of his calling. A messenger cannot afford to speak lightly, live carelessly, or act independently. They carry heaven’s message and must deliver it without alteration or fear.

VI. The Authority Behind the Message.

The authority of a prophetic message does not come from the messenger’s personality but from the One who sent him. When Habbaasa speaks under divine command, heaven backs his words. That is why signs, confirmations, and spiritual movements follow his declaration of the Wind of Change. It is not the man who carries the power; it is the message that carries the power of God.

VII. The Messenger as a Sign.

Sometimes the messenger himself becomes a prophetic sign. The life, encounters, and spiritual experiences of the messenger reveal what God is about to do. Habbaasa’s insistence on Thursday gatherings serves as a sign that God is re-aligning His people with a new spiritual timetable. His bold proclamation that God still speaks in English is a sign that God is breaking religious limits and bringing fresh revelation to His people.

VIII. The Messenger and the Discipline of Obedience.

Obedience is the signature of every true servant of God. Without obedience, the message loses its power. Prophet Habbaasa’s willingness to declare what God says — even when it challenges the norms of traditional religion — demonstrates the obedience that characterizes a true messenger. It is obedience that opens the heavens, activates the supernatural, and unlocks the next phase of God’s wind.

IX. The Messenger as a Catalyst for Transformation.

Every prophetic messenger ushers in transformation. Through their words, prayer, and spiritual authority, revival is birthed, destinies are awakened, and strongholds are broken. Habbaasa’s teachings on the Wind of Change have begun shifting individuals, families, churches, and even communities. He stands as a catalyst whom God uses to stir hunger, revival, and alignment.

X. The Messenger and the Legacy of God's Voice

True messengers leave behind a legacy of divine truth. Their message outlives their physical presence. Moses left the law. Jeremiah left prophetic warnings and promises. Paul left epistles that still guide the church. Prophet Habbaasa's message of the Wind of Change is also a legacy — a record that God spoke, moved, and called His people to readiness in this generation. The legacy is clear: God still speaks; God still calls; God still visits; and God still raises messengers.

CHAPTER TEN: THE WIND OF CHANGE IN PERSONAL DESTINY

Chapter Introduction

Every move of God begins in the heart of an individual before it sweeps across families, churches, and nations. The Wind of Change announced by Prophet Messenger of the Most High God Reuben Habbaasa is, at its core, a deeply personal call. It is a divine invitation to every believer to step out of stagnation and step into the destiny God ordained before the foundations of the world.

Destiny is not accidental — it is designed, directed, and delivered by God. Yet many people remain trapped in cycles of delay, confusion, fear, and spiritual warfare, never stepping into the fullness of their calling. The Wind of Change comes to break these cycles. It comes to open new doors and close old ones. It comes to reposition individuals from the back to the front, from wandering to purpose, from waiting to walking in divine assignment.

Prophet Habbaasa teaches that God still speaks clearly about personal destiny. The same God who spoke to Moses, Abraham, Jeremiah, and Paul continues to speak today — and speaks in the language His people understand. This chapter explores how the Wind of Change shapes individual destiny and awakens the calling within each person.

I. Destiny Begins With Divine Revelation

Destiny is discovered when God reveals His purpose. No one can enter their calling without hearing God. That is why Prophet Habbaasa emphasizes the importance of spiritual sensitivity. The Wind of Change comes to open spiritual ears so that every believer can hear God personally. When revelation flows, direction becomes clear and confusion disappears.

II. The Wind Breaks Cycles of Stagnation

Many destinies remain stuck because of spiritual resistance, internal fear, or lack of clarity. The Wind of Change functions like the east wind in Scripture — it blows away obstacles and breaks cycles that keep individuals bound.

What would take years begins to shift in months. What was impossible becomes achievable because the atmosphere changes.

III. The Voice of God as a Guide to Destiny

Prophet Habbaasa's message is consistent: God still speaks, and He speaks clearly. When God speaks to an individual, He gives instructions, warnings, confirmations, and prophetic direction. His voice lifts a person from uncertainty and plants them on the path of destiny. Divine voice is the compass of purpose.

IV. The Power of Obedience in Fulfilling Destiny

No destiny is fulfilled without obedience. When God instructs, the future opens. When God is ignored, destiny remains dormant. The instructions to gather on Thursdays and at the end of every month are not just for collective revival — they are also personal tests of obedience. Those who obey divine timing enter divine promotion.

V. Destiny Requires Separation From the Old

The Wind of Change often requires letting go of old habits, old environments, old relationships, and old beliefs. God cannot pour new wine into old wineskins. Many destinies open when individuals separate themselves from what God did not ordain. The wind blows away what is no longer needed so that destiny can rise.

VI. The Awakening of Gifts and Callings.

Every person carries gifts — spiritual, mental, and practical — but many of these gifts remain hidden. The Wind of Change awakens gifts that were dormant for years. People start dreaming again, praying again, leading again, creating again. The prophetic message activates spiritual gifts, ministry callings, and personal potential.

VII. The Alignment of Destiny Helpers.

Destiny is never walked alone. When God shifts a person's destiny, He sends helpers — mentors, friends, partners, and supporters. The Wind of Change realigns relationships and connects individuals with the people who carry the keys to their future. As Habbaasa teaches, "When your season changes, your connections also change."

VIII. The Role of Divine Encounters in Destiny

Encounters with God mark turning points in destiny. Moses met God at the burning bush. Isaiah encountered God in the temple. Paul encountered Jesus on the road to Damascus. In our days, during Thursday gatherings and end-of-month assemblies, many believers experience encounters that redirect their lives permanently. Encounters transform destinies.

IX. The Grace to Begin Again.

The Wind of Change carries grace for restoration. Many people think they have failed too much or wasted too many years to fulfill destiny. But God specializes in giving fresh starts. When the wind blows, lost years are restored, broken dreams revived, and new paths opened. Destiny is never lost— it only awaits God's timing.

X. The Manifestation of Personal Breakthrough

As the Wind of Change moves in a person's life, visible results appear — answered prayers, new opportunities, open doors, deliverance, healing, and promotion. Breakthrough is the physical evidence that destiny is being activated. When the wind moves, life moves. When the wind changes direction, destiny changes direction.

Chapter Summary.

Chapter Ten reveals that the Wind of Change is not only a national or church movement, but a deeply personal encounter designed to awaken destiny. It breaks cycles, restores purpose, aligns destiny helpers, and opens doors that were once closed. Through the prophetic message of Reuben Habbaasa, believers are reminded that the God who spoke to Moses still speaks today — guiding individuals into the fullness of their calling.

CHAPTER 11: THE WIND IN THE MARKETPLACE

Chapter Introduction

The Wind of Change is not limited to church altars or prophetic gatherings. It also blows through the marketplace — the daily environment where ideas are born, businesses operate, leaders make decisions, and economies rise or fall. The world mistakenly believes that the marketplace is merely an economic or social platform, but in truth it is a prophetic arena where God shapes nations, promotes His people, and influences systems.

Prophet Reuben Habbaasa reminds us that God still speaks today as He spoke to Moses. Just as God gave Moses instructions concerning the Sabbath, so He gave His servant the mandate for the Wind of Change gatherings. In the same way, God continues to give direction to men and women who function in business, leadership, and the economic sphere. The God who instructed His prophets in Scripture is the same God who breathes divine ideas, strategies, and warnings into the hearts of His people in the marketplace.

This chapter explores the prophetic movement of God in business, leadership, innovation, the Family-Based Economy, and national development. It is a call for believers to become carriers of divine wisdom in places where decisions shape the lives of millions.

I. God's Presence in the Marketplace.

From Genesis to Revelation, God has always involved Himself in economic activities. He gave Joseph economic strategy. He gave Solomon wisdom for governance. He blessed the works of the hands of Isaac, who sowed in famine and reaped a hundredfold. The Wind of Change reminds us that God is not only the God of the church; He is also the God of contracts, negotiations, ideas, and innovations. When His wind blows, businesses transform and leaders gain unusual wisdom.

II. The Marketplace as a Prophetic Platform

Prophet Reuben Habbaasa teaches that the wind blows where God is moving, and today God is moving in environments where influence is shaped. The marketplace is a prophetic platform because decisions made there determine whether families prosper or suffer. When the Wind of Change enters a workplace, corruption dries up, excellence rises, and righteousness becomes a culture. Men and women become vessels of divine influence, even without carrying titles.

III. Economic Transitions in a Changing World

Global economies experience cycles of wealth and scarcity, breakthrough and decline. These cycles are not merely financial but spiritual. The Wind of Change brings seasons where nations must shift economically or be left behind. God raises certain industries, closes others, and transfers opportunities to new hands. When people lack the discernment of seasons, they miss divine provision. The marketplace requires spiritual awareness to understand where the wind is blowing next.

IV. The Role of Families in Economic Stability.

The Family-Based Economy is a divine blueprint that aligns with the Wind of Change. Families are meant to be centers of production, stewardship, and wisdom. When families weaken, economies collapse. When they strengthen, nations prosper. The wind is calling fathers, mothers, and young people to rebuild strong family systems that produce wealth from unity, not division. As the prophet teaches, God's move in this season demands that families realign with purpose.

V. Believers as Economic Reformers

In this season, believers must function as reformers — not just church members. The Wind of Change empowers God's people to become problem-solvers, innovators, creators, and strategic thinkers. Prophetic people influence boards, classrooms, farms, technology, and finance because they carry heaven's wisdom. When believers enter a workplace, they do not go as employees alone but as ambassadors of God's transformation.

VI. Business as Ministry.

There is no separation between spiritual calling and economic influence. Many business owners, entrepreneurs, and leaders are discovering that their work is a platform for God's assignment. The Wind of Change breathes life into dreams that seemed impossible and empowers people to build enterprises that glorify God. Business becomes ministry when integrity is upheld, compassion is practiced, and excellence becomes a testimony of the kingdom. Hallelujah

VII. The Prophetic Advantage in Leadership and Decision Making

The marketplace rewards those who move ahead of trends. The prophetic advantage is the ability to hear God early, sense shifts, and prepare before others notice change. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa's call to gather for the Wind of Change reminds us that God still directs His people with precision. The same God who instructed His prophet about days of gathering is the same who gives divine direction to leaders concerning investments, expansions, and partnerships.

Chapter Summary

The Wind of Change is blowing strongly in the marketplace. It is empowering believers to rise as leaders, innovators, and reformers. God is moving through families, businesses, and industries to establish righteousness and purpose. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa's messages confirm that God still speaks clearly, giving direction just as He did in Scripture. Those who discern His voice will succeed, influence systems, and build a legacy that outlives them.

CHAPTER 12: THE WIND AND THE END-TIME CHURCH

Chapter Introduction

Every generation has a church, but not every generation experiences the same dimension of God's move. The Wind of Change comes to prepare, purify, and awaken the church for the purposes of God in the last days. In this season, God is calling the global church to rise with power, unity, and spiritual intelligence. He is calling her to walk in the fire of holiness, the strength of prayer, and the boldness of prophetic witness.

Prophet Reuben Habbaasa continually emphasizes that "God still speaks today." The same God who spoke to Moses speaks now — and He speaks English, Kinyarwanda, Luganda, and every language He chooses. He gave Moses instructions concerning the Sabbath, and in our time He has given Prophet Reuben Habbaasa instructions for the Wind of Change gatherings. This is proof that the God of the Scriptures is still actively leading His people.

The end-time church must therefore rise to discern the voice of God, walk in the Spirit, and align with the prophetic wind that is blowing. This chapter explores how the church can prepare for revival, embrace unity, and respond to God's call in this prophetic generation.

I. The Identity of the End-Time Church

The end-time church is not defined by buildings but by believers who carry fire, truth, and faith. It is a church purified by trials, strengthened by prayer, and guided by the Spirit. The Wind of Change is shaping a generation that is spiritually awake, disciplined, and committed to righteousness. This church will not compromise; it will shine.

II. The Power of Unity in the Spirit

The greatest weapon of the church is unity. Division weakens the church, but unity creates a spiritual force that cannot be resisted by darkness. The Wind of Change calls believers from different churches, nations, and backgrounds to stand together, pray together, and work together. When the church unites, revival accelerates.

III. Revival as a Response to the Wind

Revival is not an event; it is heaven invading earth. It comes when God's people respond to His wind with humility, repentance, and hunger. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa's gatherings and messages remind us that revival begins when people create space for God to speak. The wind comes where people prepare altars of obedience, purity, and prayer. Revival is the fruit of alignment.

IV. Prophetic Listening and Discernment

The end-time church must learn to hear God clearly. In a generation full of noise, opinions, and confusion, prophetic listening becomes essential. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa teaches that divine direction is still available to anyone who yields their spirit. If God spoke to Moses, He can speak to His church today. Prophetic discernment helps believers avoid deception, follow divine timing, and walk in supernatural wisdom.

V. Preparing the Bride for the King

Jesus Christ is returning for a church that is ready, mature, and radiant. The Wind of Change prepares the church to stand in holiness and truth. It teaches believers to love righteousness, reject compromise, and live with eternal focus. This preparation is not fear-driven; it is love-driven. The church that expects the King becomes a church that transforms the world.

V. The Strength of Intercession

Intercessors are the hidden engines of the end-time church. They carry burdens for nations, families, and leaders. The Wind of Change stirs intercessors to pray with new fire and revelation. When the church prays, heaven moves. When intercessors rise, revival spreads. Prayer becomes a prophetic force that breaks limitations and opens new spiritual seasons.

VI. The Global Move of God.

The Wind of Change is not confined to one country. It is blowing across Africa, Europe, Asia, the Americas, and the Islands of the world. God is raising apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, reformers, worshipers, and intercessors who will carry the fire of revival to their nations. The end-time church is global, unstoppable, and victorious.

Chapter Summary

The end-time church is being prepared by the Wind of Change to walk in unity, holiness, revival, and prophetic power. God is still speaking to His people, just as He spoke to Moses, and the messages given through Prophet Reuben Habbaasa confirm His continued voice in this generation. The church must rise with prayer, discernment, and courage. When the church aligns with the wind, revival becomes inevitable and global transformation begins.

CHAPTER 13: HOW TO ALIGN WITH CHANGE

Chapter Introduction

The Wind of Change does not benefit those who merely observe it — it empowers those who align with it. Divine change is not automatic. It requires positioning, preparation, and spiritual sensitivity. In every season of transition, God calls His people to adjust their lives so they can walk in the direction of His movement.

Prophet Reuben Habbaasa emphasizes that “God still speaks and still directs His people today.” Just as God gave Moses the Sabbath instructions and commanded him to gather Israel at specific times, He has also instructed His servant to gather believers on Thursdays and at the end of every month to experience the Wind of Change. These instructions are not rituals but strategies — divine alignments that open doors for direction, protection, and spiritual clarity.

This chapter explores how individuals can align with the move of God in practical, spiritual, and prophetic ways. When alignment meets obedience, destiny opens.

I. Understanding Divine Timing

Alignment begins with an understanding that God moves in times and seasons. When a person respects divine timing, they position themselves to receive instruction and empowerment. Ignoring God’s timing leads to delay; embracing it leads to acceleration. The Wind of Change requires believers to sense when God is calling them to shift.

II. The Role of Fasting in Alignment

Fasting sharpens spiritual sensitivity. It removes distractions, breaks fleshly resistance, and opens the spirit to hear clearly. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa often teaches that fasting prepares the heart for prophetic encounters. Those who fast during seasons of change gain access to divine clarity, strength, and unusual favor.

III. Prayer as a Channel of Direction

Prayer is the posture of alignment. It is the place where believers receive instructions just as prophets receive messages. When the Wind of Change is blowing, prayer becomes the steering wheel that positions a person in the right direction. Prayer softens the heart, strengthens the mind, and aligns a person’s spirit with heaven’s frequency.

IV. The Discipline of Obedience

Obedience is the proof that a believer has heard God. The Wind of Change favors those who act quickly when God speaks. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa’s gatherings are built on obedience — God spoke, and the prophet acted.

When God gives a prompting, a warning, or an instruction, obedience becomes the door to blessing. Delay, on the other hand, can shut doors meant to be opened.

V. Building a Lifestyle of Consecration

Consecration is not a moment; it is a lifestyle. It means setting oneself apart for the purposes of God. When the wind blows, consecration keeps believers focused. It closes demonic access points and strengthens spiritual authority. Those who live consecrated lives walk confidently in changing seasons because they are anchored in purity.

VI. Listening Prophetically

Alignment requires prophetic listening — the ability to hear God beyond noise, confusion, or personal desire. God still speaks today, and He gives instructions to those who quiet their spirits. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa teaches that the same God who spoke to Moses speaks now in languages people understand. He guides His people through impressions, visions, scripture, and prophetic messages. Listening is a spiritual discipline that must be cultivated daily.

VII. Partnering with the Wind Through Action

Alignment is incomplete without action. Faith without works is dead. When God reveals a direction, the believer must move. Some actions include repositioning, breaking unhelpful habits, starting new assignments, or stepping into leadership roles. The Wind of Change empowers action, but it cannot replace responsibility.

VIII. Staying Stable in Unstable Times

One of the greatest tests during divine transition is instability. Systems shake, relationships shift, opportunities change, and the world may seem unpredictable. But those aligned with the wind remain stable. Their stability is not in circumstances but in God's voice. When believers anchor themselves in prayer, scripture, and prophetic direction, the storm becomes a pathway rather than a threat.

IX. The Power of Spiritual Community

No one aligns alone. Spiritual community creates protection, encouragement, and strength. Joining prophetic gatherings, like the Thursday Wind of Change meetings, places believers in the environment of divine movement. The right community provides accountability and wisdom, preventing believers from drifting during seasons of transition.

X. The Blessing of Consistency

Consistency is the bridge between instruction and fulfillment. Many people hear God but fail to walk in His direction because they lack consistency.

The Wind of Change requires steady prayer, regular devotion, obedience, and disciplined living. Consistency builds spiritual capacity and prepares believers to handle the blessings and responsibilities that change brings.

Chapter Summary

Alignment with the Wind of Change requires spiritual sensitivity, obedience, fasting, prayer, prophetic listening, and the courage to act when God speaks. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa's messages remind us that God still guides His people with clear instructions, just as He did with Moses. Those who align with God's timing will experience transformation, stability, and divine empowerment. The wind is blowing — and alignment determines who rises with it.

CHAPTER 14: BECOMING THE WIND

Chapter Introduction

There comes a moment in every believer's journey when they are no longer just observers of God's move — they become carriers of it. The Wind of Change is not only an experience; it is a mantle. It is a divine empowerment that transforms ordinary men and women into instruments of revival, reform, and spiritual influence.

Prophet Reuben Habbaasa teaches that "The Wind of Change is not coming just to touch you, but to make you a vessel through which God touches others." This is where alignment evolves into assignment. When the wind enters a believer, they become a living expression of God's movement on earth. They become voices, leaders, intercessors, reformers, and agents of transformation.

This chapter explores what it means to become the wind — to embody God's change, to carry His fire, and to be a prophetic force in families, communities, nations, and generations.

I. Understanding the Mantle of the Wind

Becoming the wind means carrying a divine grace that influences atmospheres and shifts environments. It is the mantle of revival, courage, and spiritual authority. When the wind rests on a person, they no longer blend in — they stand out. Their words carry weight, their prayers carry power, and their presence carries peace. The same God who appointed Moses, Joshua, Elijah, and Esther to their generations is raising men and women now under the Wind of Change mantle.

II. Becoming a Vessel of God's Voice

God still speaks today, and those who carry the wind become amplifiers of His voice. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa's prophetic messages remind us that God uses yielded vessels to communicate His intentions to families, churches, and nations. Becoming the wind means allowing God to speak through you — in wisdom, love, conviction, and truth. The world changes when believers become the echo of heaven.

III. Living as a Carrier of Revival

Revival is not a program; it is a person on fire for God. A believer who becomes the wind carries revival in their lifestyle, not just in their prayers. They carry compassion, holiness, and supernatural hunger. Revival is not limited to church gatherings — it flows into workplaces, schools, leadership circles, and homes. Those who become the wind ignite revival everywhere they go.

IV. Transforming Families and Communities

The Wind of Change begins in individuals but manifests in families and communities. When someone becomes the wind, they break generational patterns, introduce new spiritual atmospheres, and establish godly foundations. They become peacemakers, counselors, intercessors, and leaders. Transformation starts at home and spreads outward. A changed person becomes a channel of community change.

V. Carrying the Wind Into Leadership.

Leadership is one of the greatest expressions of influence. When a leader is touched by the wind, their leadership becomes prophetic. They lead with integrity, discernment, and compassion. The Wind of Change shapes leaders who serve with wisdom and vision. They become reformers in government, education, ministry, business, and social systems. Their leadership becomes a reflection of God's kingdom.

V. Boldness as a Mark of the Wind.

The wind gives boldness. A believer who becomes the wind does not operate in fear or hesitation. They speak truth with love, confront darkness with authority, and walk into new territories with courage. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa often teaches that boldness is the fruit of a heart touched by God. A bold believer becomes unshakable in purpose and unstoppable in destiny.

VI. The Spirit of Influence and Impact

Becoming the wind means becoming influential in a spiritual and moral sense. Influence is not about fame; it is about impact. God raises those who carry the wind to influence generations. Their words inspire, their decisions shape culture, and their walk reveals Christ. They become standard-setters and culture-shifters.

VII. Leaving a Prophetic Legacy.

The Wind of Change is generational. Those who receive it must pass it on. A believer who becomes the wind leaves behind a legacy of faith, wisdom, and godly influence. Their life becomes a testimony that guides future generations. Just as biblical prophets and modern-day messengers like Prophet Reuben Habbaasa carry mantles that endure beyond their years, so will every believer who embraces this calling.

VIII. Becoming an Answer to Prayer

Many families, cities, and nations are waiting for deliverers, teachers, encouragers, and visionaries. Becoming the wind means becoming the answer to someone's prayer. God raises you to solve problems, heal wounds, guide the lost, and strengthen the broken. You become the vessel through which heaven responds.

IX. Living a Life That Moves With God.

Ultimately, becoming the wind is about living in continuous partnership with God. It is about flowing with His Spirit, discerning His voice, and adjusting your life to His direction. When believers learn to move with God daily, they become unstoppable. They become walking revivals, living prophecies, and carriers of divine fire.

Chapter Summary

To become the wind is to carry God's movement within you. It is to become a vessel of His voice, a carrier of revival, a transformer of families, a bold leader, and a conduit of spiritual influence. Prophet Reuben Habbaasa's messages remind us that God is preparing people who will not only feel the wind but become the wind. These believers will leave a legacy that shapes families, communities, and nations. The Wind of Change is not just coming — it is becoming flesh in those willing to yield.

AFTERWORD

The journey through this book has been a prophetic unveiling of what God is doing in our generation through the Wind of Change. As the messages of the Prophet Messenger of the Most High God, Reuben Habbaasa, continue to echo across districts, nations, and hearts, one truth remains unshakable: God still speaks.

He speaks to individuals.

He speaks to families.

He speaks to nations.

He speaks through prophets.

He speaks through seasons.

The Wind of Change is not limited to a place, a people, or a moment — it is a divine movement that heaven has released to realign destinies and restore the fear of God in the land. This book has captured only a shadow of the great things God has spoken and continues to speak through His servant. Yet even this shadow is enough to awaken a generation to listen, obey, and rise.

As you close these pages, may your heart remain open to what God is still saying. For the God who spoke to Moses, Elijah, Daniel, and the early church is the same God speaking today — even in English — calling His people into a higher walk and a deeper experience with His wind.

May you remain ready, positioned, and yielded as the Wind of Change continues to blow.

FINAL DECLARATION

- I declare in the name of Jesus Christ that the Wind of Change is blowing over every life that reads this book.
- I declare that destinies are rising, families are being restored, and nations are being positioned under the authority of God.
- I declare that the voice of God will become clear, undeniable, and powerful in your life.
 - May every closed door open.
 - May every dry bone rise.
 - May every delay break.
 - May every enemy scatter before the wind of the Almighty.

- As Prophet Reuben Habbaasa has spoken,
- “God still speaks — and His wind still moves.”

May this wind carry you, lift you, cleanse you, establish you, and launch you into your ordained purpose. You will never remain the same again.

In Jesus’ name.

Amen.

FINAL BOOK SUMMARY

This book has presented a prophetic journey into understanding the Wind of Change as revealed through the messages of Prophet Messenger Reuben Habbaasa. It explored how God uses seasons of divine wind to shift individuals, families, nations, and the global church. From the biblical foundations of prophetic wind to the testimonies of modern gatherings, each chapter illuminated the ways God directs His people.

Key themes included:

- God still speaks today
- The Wind of Change is a divine force for transformation
- Families are central to God’s agenda
- Nations experience spiritual realignment
- Thursday and month-end gatherings carry prophetic significance
- The prophetic voice remains essential in times of transition
- Spiritual warfare accompanies seasons of divine elevation

The Wind of Change is here, and it requires response, obedience, and discernment. God is repositioning His people for impact, influence, and revival. Every chapter, testimony, prophecy, and teaching in this book prepares you to walk boldly into your divine season.

The Wind of Change is not a theory.

- It is a movement.
- It is a calling.
- It is a manifestation of God’s voice in our time.

May this book ignite faith, awaken purpose, and align every reader with the mighty wind that God has released upon the earth.
